TEL AVIV. — Israel's security situation in Lebanon did not become serious until the Syrians began their move southwards there but when the Syrians entered Lebanon — with Israel's tacit consent — Ahiu (res.) Ariel Sharon said yesterday.

The one-time Likud politician, speaking to the Israel-American Chamber of Commerce here, said Israel could not allow the Syrian forces to establish a foothold in Lebanon if it forcefully announced its opposition "and backs this up with deeds."

Elasting the government for having allowed the Syrians into Lebanon without demanding any return for this, the leader of the new Shas Party said, "There has been a mistake in letting the Syrians enter, in order to gain influence in Damascus. The Syrians were there to push for their dream of a 'Greater Syria.' The only ones who had gained nothing by this deal are the Israelis, he said.

Once upon a time the alarm bells would have rung off if 80 Syrian tanks entered Lebanon," he said. "Now there are 500 there, and not far from the Israel border."

The next step in the Syrians' plan for a Greater Syria would be their entry into Jordan, he warned.

Israel, he said, was making a grave mistake in allowing political stubbornness and at the same time "timidity" making dangerous con-

HAIFA. — Foreign Minister Yigal Allon said last night that he believes the political momentum in the Middle East will continue to build up with the visits of U.S. Secretary of State Vance and UN Secretary-General Waldheim.

"I believe that by the end of the decade, some settlement must be reached. If not an overall peace agreement, at least a cessation of the state of war. This will be a good thing, and I am optimistic that the Geneva conference will resume this year," he said.

Allon, who was addressing a meeting of the 280 delegates of the Israel Bond Conference at the Dan Carmel Hotel, said that the Geneva conference should be well prepared beforehand and must be convened on the basis of resolution 242 and with the original participants.

Israel was able to offer her neighbours a territorial compromise, but would not compromise security, he said. The compromise may be related to both sides would offer a solution that serve the basic interests of Results could be achieved with will, and both sides need peace fully.

Allon said that "Egypt, Jordan, Syria have nothing to fear from us. They face no enemy. In the future, we shall have to open our border in Israel. Syria was urged to concentrate troops against it and go deep into Lebanon while fearing that Israel would exploit opportunities. Egypt was able to come straight to the Libyan border without fearing Israel. Jordan has nothing to fear." The Foreign Minister asserted that "if all of us cooperate peacefully, we have resources to make this region flourish and become the envy of the developed world."

BEERSHEVA—The contest for the leadership of the Labour Party has injected new life into the party, Defence Minister Shimon Peres said yesterday when addressing a party meeting.

What had led him to present his candidacy, he said, had not been exaggerated esteem for himself, but his evaluation that despite Labour's achievements it was in a bad way and unless it reorganized, it could expect a heavy blow.

Peres said that if he became Premier, he would at his first act would be to assemble all workers' committees and propose a new social covenant which included a demand for eight hours of productive work.

"There is no reason why our work should be less productive than his European counterpart," he said.

Women must play a role in economy, and they must be enabled to take a job, Peres said. "There should be two women in the Cabinet and women should be represented in the running of things."

Education Minister Arieh Yadin said that the "conflict" between Rabin and Peres was just a personal battle but one of ideas and of emphases within the party. He nevertheless would prefer to work without the personal element and the issues debated "theoretically" before the party.

Yadin was answering student questions at one of Bar-Ilan University's noontime question and answer sessions. He added that he had Rabin, "because I agree with political and security line and because he has given me constructive steps to take. I have saved the state's balance payments situation."

LONDON. — Amnesty International, the London-based civil rights group, yesterday cabled Israel's Attorney-General, Prof. Aharon Barak, to express concern about reports that Arab prisoners in Israel are on a hunger strike protesting against prison conditions.

One prisoner has died due to the strike, they claimed, according to these reports.

Amnesty International urged Barak "to do everything possible to prevent further deaths by initiating immediate improvements in prison conditions as recommended by the International Committee of the Red Cross."

The group said the hunger strike began at Ashkelon Prison December 10 and involved between 350 and 400 Arab prisoners. It said they have received reports the strike continues despite the perversal of the strikers to differ prisons.

The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) said in a statement on prison conditions in Israel earlier this month: "ICRC delegates have observed some improvement in detention conditions, but a number of problems which have been seen regularly by the ICRC have not been solved. One problem is overcrowding."

Barak last night said he has yet received the cable.

a letter to Knesset Speaker Yisrael Alulianu saying that he believed that Shurval's action had been submitted on this basis of press reports which "grossly misquote me." The facts were as follows, he said:

"I was not approached by any Knesset Member on this matter (to persuade him to withdraw his complaint against Rosenbaum). The first I learned of the matter was received by the State Corporation, which information was in turn conveyed to me, according to which influential political figures would be prepared to try to cause non-publication of this State Corporation's report in exchange for the complaining member's resignation being withdrawn. I flatly rejected the idea. No names of any specific members of Knesset were disclosed to me, nor was I informed of the source of the information which was given to me. I have no means of knowing whether this information was reliable or not.

"I flatly deny ever having said or in fact having knowing of any payments from the IC being made to political parties in Israel."

At the time, a prominent member of the Knesset State Corporation Committee, Mordechai Ben-Porat, told The Jerusalem Post he has had never heard of any political parties getting money from the Israel Corporation.

Ben-Porat said no Knesset member had the authority to make promises about the publication or suppression or postponement of any State Corporation report, and he did not believe that anybody could have acted so irresponsible as to have misled so much.

While he did not regard Baron de Rothschild's statements as objectionable, "and the Baron has a right to speak up like anybody else," Ben-

Porat emphasized that nob Israel or non-Israeli, had the right to rebuke the State Comptroller the content or timing of publications "since under the that's entirely up to him."

The State Control Committee debated the report on the Israel position on Monday.

A well-placed source in Jerusalem, reacting to the criticism of the State Comptroller, said that the latter's report clearly that the appointment of a central controller was first discussed by the IC's executive committee. More than nearly four years after the corporation was founded and in three years after the Knesset passed the Israel Corporation Law.

The source also called attention another statement in the Comptroller's report: that a draft report by the State Comptroller which was submitted to the Corporation's financial manager was brought to the attention of the executive committee at its meeting on February 17, 1972. The committee, however, did not ask for the draft report. Nor did the draft report contain any reference to

HAIFA.— Though has been said about the situation in Lebanon, Chief of Staff Mordechai Gur said yesterday, "What remains now is to take decisions."

Rav-Aluf Gur, who was speaking to a group of Israel Bond leaders from the U.S. at Israeli's Bonding here, said the situation in Lebanon—where Syrian troops have intervened in fighting in the south—is "most complex and complicated. We are following events there with the utmost seriousness."

Gur talked to the 250 delegates of the 23rd Middle Eastern Bonds Conference before they left the Dan Hotel for a tour of the "Good Fence" stations along the Lebanese border. He said they would be able to get the atmosphere on the spot; but he refused to give any further details on the situation.

He did however stress that Israel had to ensure its military strength and its ability to prevent war. If Israel did go to war it had to be sure it could do so in the best possible way, in order to end the campaign with results that would give it the best possible military and political bargaining position.

Here he added that he had no doubt that Israel was interested in co-existence with the Arabs, and needed peace. "We came here to live with our Arab neighbours and not to fight them," he said.

Gur stressed the close and essential relationship between Israel and the Jewish people, which had always stood up when put to the test. The Jewish people, he said, had no dangerous intentions. As against the great potential of the Arabs.

Referring to Israel's security needs, he said Israelis could not ask whether they could afford it, but whether they must have it for their safety and future.

"Before the Yom Kippur War the discussions were not on military problems but on finances; and that's a lesson we do not want to repeat," he said.

But since the war Israel had done much to increase her military might.

"If we have to fight today, we are stronger than yesterday," he said. "We have built up the army, we have used the time and the means made available to us, and we feel sure of ourselves—a fact which is known to both the Arabs and the great powers."

However, it was not enough to be safe today. Israel had to see to it that the feeling of safety prevails in the future, "and that will cost a lot."

There was however the problem that Israel had even as little as 10 per cent of the young men called for compulsory service lacked the educational level needed for operating sophisticated equipment. Everything should be done to see that every boy received adequate education so that this would not continue, he said.

He did not consider U.S. military aid as an "insurance policy" for the U.S. gets a lot out of it too. I don't feel we are asking for help, but that we're partners to a deal in which the U.S. has got more than ourselves."

As long as the Mideast continues to be a part of U.S. strategic concept, the need to strengthen Israel's forces would remain part of U.S. policy, he said, because it was in America's interest.

"Therefore I don't see why we shall not be able to get all the weapons and systems we need for our future defence," the Chief of Staff said. He stressed that it was very risky to try and anticipate what the volatile Arab leaders would do. There were too many stories and doubts or risks regarding its security needs. "Don't ask if it's possible but if it's must," he summed up.

Answering questions, Gur said Israel did not consider the PLO or any other Palestinian force as a true military force. In the context of a military force, he said, there were no Palestinians. They can make trouble and terror but not endanger us militarily or stop us achieving our goals," he said.

The Sandia, who have been building up their strength with U.S. help, were another matter, however. Said Gur, Israel had to be ready for one of the Arab confrontation states, he said, stressing that they were within artillery range of Ellat.

The Libyans, heavily armed by the Russians, also had to be taken into account, as both before, during and after war they could transfer large quantities of weapons to the confrontation states.

At the same time, he said that the Israelis had grown stronger with respect to the Arabs. Our worry has to be not what is going to happen tomorrow or the day after but what will happen in two or three years," he said.

After their return from the border, the Bonds delegate attended a Technion-Symposium on Israel's contribution to alternative energy

WASHINGTON. — Vice-President Walter Mondale's current visit to Europe and Japan provides another example of the Carter Administration's being better than it sounds. For the point of the trip is not (as White House news secretary Jody Powell said) that it is "substantive, not symbolic"; still, less (as Zbigniew Brzezinski of the National Security staff said in a misplaced shot at his predecessors) that the Vice-President is selling no "grand designs."

The salient feature about the Mondale trip is that for the first time in years an American administration is unified on an approach to the major allies. For once the White House, the State Department, the Treasury and the Pentagon have a roughly agreed position on what they are prepared to give and what they expect in return.

Very internal differences marked the approach to the allies during the Ford Administration. The White House, the Treasury and other economic agencies were primarily concerned about inflation, and wanted allied countries to put a hold on economic expansion. The State Department, particularly Henry Kissinger, was more concerned about the Defence Department, wanted allied political leaders to be in moonlighting defence efforts and coordinating stands with respect to the oil-exporting and other developing countries. That tended toward more expansive economic policies.

Mondale, however, bears within him two carrots to make it easier for Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany and Japan's new Prime Minister, Takeo Fukuda, to expand their economies more rapidly. For one thing, he is expressing concern over German and Japanese security, and is also warning both an economic summit meeting preferably in London after the annual Nato get-together next May — at which the German and Japanese leaders could be seen to be acting not on their own, but in harmony.

But if Mondale has some give in his briefcase, he would also like to nail down some objectives. A halt to nuclear proliferation is one, given as it is the first time that the State Department in the inaugural and in his first press conference that he looked forward to a world free of nuclear arms. Presumably Mondale will push the Germans and the French very hard to end their commitments to export nuclear plants which could easily become the base for weapons development.

Modernising Nato's defences, along the lines suggested in the report by Sens. Sam Nunn and Dwyer Bartlett, is a second objective. Without going into details, the Vice-President apparently would like the other Nato allies to lend a hand to the Germans and Americans in improving the common defence against a much more ready Soviet force.

Finally and most delicately, there are various political reforms. The Vice-President at least wants to explore the ground for internal changes that would make Britain less vulnerable to class division, France less vulnerable to maldistribution of income, and Italy less vulnerable to the clash between Catholics and Communists. Presumably he would like to see if these countries can adopt policies which diminish their vulnerability.

Thus the Mondale visit is far, far more serious than the public relations accounts blared forth from the White House suggest. The Vice-President is opening the door to a beginning of a long-range policy whereby this country makes its economic strength available to foster political reforms in allied countries. He is initiating, in other words, a politics of the alliances. (See Mondals and Pope, p.4)

Moyal tipped for Labour Party chief

Jerusalem Post Staff

TEL. AVIV. — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and several Labour Party leaders have decided to make deputy communications minister Ezer Moyal the Labour Party's next secretary-general, according to a confidential report here yesterday. Incumbent Secretary-General Meir Zarmi has served notice that he does not want to remain in office after the party's convention next month.

The report said the decision to nominate Moyal was taken on Wednesday night at a meeting attended by Moshe Barai, Danny Rosolio, Ya'acov Tsuri, Zvi Alderson and Moyal.

Mr. Moyal was not available last night for confirmation.

On Wednesday night, 35 leaders of the former Mapai faction in Labour met in Tel Aviv to discuss plans to assure that Yitzhak Rabin is renominated as Labour's candidate for Prime Minister.

The ex-Mapai faction is expected to cast the decisive vote in Labour's as the former Rafi faction, which was the second largest group in the Shimon Peres, and the former Ha'avoda faction, which backed Foreign Minister Yigal Allon, cancel each other out.

The meeting was held at the Tel Aviv home of Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinovich. It was attended by Education Minister Aharon Yadin, Agriculture Minister Aharon Uzan, Knesset members Eli Moyal, Havi Shimon, Ora' Namir and Nuzhat Katib, and Histadrut Central Committee members Uriel Abrahamowicz, Yisrael Keyser and Naftali Ushpiz.

Spain curbs civil rights in crackdown

MADRID. — The government yesterday suspended some civil rights and gave police special powers to crack down on political violence, after declaring a "firm decision" to lead Spain to democracy.

Government sources said the crackdown had the full support of army leaders, earlier reported edgy over unrest that has taken seven lives in the past week.

Premier Adolfo Suarez, criticized for not maintaining law and order, ordered a series of measures, including the banning of all demonstrations, after hailing radical groups for the spiraling violence.

The Government said it was invoking a 1976 anti-terrorism law to allow police to hold suspects more than 72 hours without charges, and giving them the right to search without warrants. It also was ordering a crackdown on possession of small arms by private citizens.

This included giving police the right to confiscate guns from persons who have licenses if there is reason to believe the arms "might be used against order." The extreme right is known to have a big stock of small arms.

Police have been ordered to bring the guilty to justice no matter what "their status or ideology," the government said — in an apparent reference to criticism that police are quick to seize leftists but let the extreme right go uncontrolled.

There was no mention by name of the two political kidnappings, blamed on radical leftists, that have shaken the Suarez government's authority.

Police have reported no developments in these — the weeks-old abduction of Antonio Maria de Oriol, and that of Lieutenant General Emilio Villasana, President of the supreme court of military justice, who was seized by the same anti-government band last Monday.

Meanwhile, the labour situation returned to normal yesterday with the return to work of the perhaps 1.5m. Spaniards who had stopped work, at least briefly, on Wednesday, to protest the massacre of five Communists by rightist extremists.

A funeral in Madrid on Wednesday for three of the five slain victims jammed downtown Madrid with an estimated 100,000 people, who stood silently with clenched fists in the left salute. (AP)

State Department criticizes Czechs on rights issue

WASHINGTON. — The State Department on Wednesday strongly deplored the recent crackdown on human rights activists in Czechoslovakia.

Spokesman Frederick Brown referred specifically to reports of the detention and harassment of some of the signatories of the "Charter 77" manifesto on human rights.

"All signatories of the Helsinki Final Act are pledged to promote, respect, and observe human rights and fundamental freedoms for all," Brown said. "We must strongly deplore the violation of such rights and freedoms wherever they occur." That Brown volunteered the statement to reporters without being asked was a marked departure from Department policies under Henry Kissinger. Officials could not recall any instance during Kissinger's tenure in which a country was singled out for criticism for alleged human rights violations in an unsolicited public statement.

Kissinger believed that public statements concerning human rights violations by individual countries tended to be counter-productive. In Vienna, the Foreign Ministry spokesman said that Czechoslovak Ambassador Karel Komarek met with Foreign Minister Willihald Fahn on Tuesday. Komarek sought confirmation of an offer by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky last week to grant asylum to Czechoslovak dissidents.

Emigre broadcaster calls Nazi-style movie 'last straw' Soviet cinema's 'sinister Jew'

By ROBIN STAFFORD

ROME. — The opening shot of the film is a darkened screen and the crack of a pistol shot. Then the commentator's voice says, "that was how the Jewess Fanya Kaplan tried to kill Lenin."

The film goes on to depict events in the Soviet Union for the past half-century. When sequences show Hitler's tanks invading Russia the commentator says, "Jewish capital helped Hitler to power."

Stalin's rival Trotsky, founder of the Red Army, is referred to by his Jewish name, Leon Bronstein. Whenever scenes of deprivation, hunger or difficulty are shown, a prominent Jewish leader also appears on the screen.

The film is a product of the Soviet film industry. According to Russian Jewish broadcaster Ruvim Vygodsky, 33, the work — directed by Boris Karpov and entitled "Secret and Open Things," has been shown to Red Army groups, in private clubs and in at least one public cinema to the Soviet Union.

Vygodsky, who has been in Rome for the past two months, told UPI here that he was so upset when he saw the first private showing 15 months ago in Moscow that he and his wife decided to leave. They have been here ever since getting their exit visas.

(In Moscow, officials have confirmed the existence of the film, which they describe as "anti-Zionist.")

The slight, bespectacled Vygodsky, familiar to millions of Russians starting with his wartime broadcasts throughout the 900-day siege of Leningrad, said yesterday: "that film was the last straw."

He said he had managed to join a special group of people invited to see the film 15 months ago at the Moscow Documentary Film Centre, which is headed by Alexei Semin.

Vygodsky said, "when the lights went up after that first showing there was absolute silence for minutes. The audience was very upset and asked to whom the film was to be shown, but they got no answer."

He added, "then a non-Jew stood and said, 'if this film is distributed I will be unable to face my friends'."

Vygodsky said that a well-known Jewish screenwriter, much decorated in the war, then said that he was a Communist and an anti-Zionist and added, "this film is not anti-Zionist but anti-Jewish. If it is distributed, there will be new pogroms."

Vygodsky said three-time Stalin Award-winning Jewish cameraman Shimon Kogan wrote to Soviet Communist Party Secretary-General Leonid Brezhnev about the film; "but no significant changes were made."

The broadcaster said the Party Central Committee decided to show the film privately and to Red Army clubs to avoid having Western journalists and diplomats become aware of it. But, he said, a year ago in Leningrad he saw the film advertised and showing at the Znanje Cinema.

Vygodsky said that although the film was what made him finally seek permission to leave the Soviet Union, his disaffection for the regime had begun several years ago.

"I was not a Party member, but I was a patriot," he said. "Then I began to have some doubts when composers like Shostakovich and Prokofiev were denounced as 'cosmopolitan'."

He said he was asked to do less and less broadcasting after he refused to do the commentary for a film called "Beware, Zionism" after the 1967 Six-Day War, and for another on Czechoslovakia after the 1968 Soviet invasion of that country.

"It had shots showing Czechs cheering the arriving Soviet tanks," he said. "But those were old clips of people cheering Czech reform Communist leader Alexander Dubcek."

Now Vygodsky hopes to go on broadcasting to the Russians from Western stations, and "to explain over here just how slanted Soviet broadcasting and documentaries have become." (UPI)

Moyers rumoured for CIA director

Jerusalem Post Reporter

WASHINGTON. — Bill Moyers, former top aide to President Lyndon Johnson, is a prime candidate to be nominated director of the Central Intelligence Agency by President Carter, according to sources inside and outside the administration.

Moyers was out of the country yesterday and could not be reached. A source at CBS news in New York City, where Moyers is the chief reporter and anchorman for "CBS Reports," said he is filming a documentary in Cuba, where he is leader the CIA allegedly plotted eight times to kill between 1960 and 1965.

Knowledgeable sources said Moyers has been recommended to Carter by top presidential aides, but that there were reasons the administration refused to confirm it. The sources declined to say what they were. (AP)

IN BRIEF

Smith pushing own plan for Rhodesia

SALISBURY. — Prime Minister Ian Smith is expected to press ahead with his plans to achieve an internal political settlement in Rhodesia after receiving a vote of confidence from his ruling party yesterday.

The Executive meeting was mainly to discuss government plans to achieve an internal settlement linked with a removal of racial discrimination, should the governing fail to reach agreement with the nationalist leaders.

It followed Smith's rejection Monday of new British proposals bringing about black majority rule.

'Manson' producer slain
LOS ANGELES. — Producer-director Laurence Merrick, maker of the documentary film "Manson on the Charles Manson cult," was shot to death on Wednesday at his school in Hollywood by an unidentified assailant, police said. The man escaped.

"Manson," a documentary in the life of the Manson clan, was shot during and after the 1970-71 Manson and three women follow for the murders of actress Sharon Tate and six other persons. (A)

U.S. sues ex-Nazi

CHICAGO. — The U.S. Justice Department filed suit on Wednesday to revoke the citizenship of suspected Nazi war criminal who allegedly beat and killed civilians in Poland during World War II.

The complaint says Frank W. 54, illegally obtained his American citizenship in 1950 by refusing to close his activities in the war membership in the Gestapo SS. (A)

Anti-Zionist book

EVANSTON, ILL. — Jewish group at Northwestern University is organizing protests against Northwestern engineering professor who has written a book which claims there was no systematic extermination of Jews or other peoples by Nazis during World War II.

Arthur Butts says in his book, "The Holocaust of the 20th Century," the reports of mass exterminations were started by Zionist organizations to help legitimate claims to the State of Israel. (AP)

Mini-walkouts in Paris

PARIS. — Mail deliveries were halted, garbage went uncollected, some schools closed and most of France flights were cancelled as a series of 24-hour walkouts continued in Paris yesterday.

Foreign airlines continued to operate despite the strike by Air France ground and flying personnel. Government civil servants and employees of nationalized industries have been taking part in the week-long series of mini-walkouts to protest the austerity programme by the government. (AP)

Lebanese civil war made children into traumatized 'ticking bombs'

BEIRUT. — Thousands of Lebanese children are suffering from psychological traumas caused by the nation's civil war and, according to a Lebanese sociologist, are time bombs in an already shaken society.

Mohammed Barakat, director of the Islamic Orphanage, produced several examples of "traumatic afflictions" he said have affected more than 10,000 children. They require urgent attention now that the 19-month conflict seems over, he said.

"When I grow up I will pull some Christian by his hair, drag him from underneath a bed, and then shoot bullets into his stomach, mouth and head," said Samir Hayoun, an 8-year-old Muslim boy.

"That was how Christians killed my father," he said, toying with spent artillery shells.

Samir, along with scores of Muslim children at the Magassed Orphanage, recounted gruesome details of atrocities inflicted on their families during the bloody sectarian conflict. They collectively envisioned Christians as "doubled-headed monsters eating human flesh and drinking flasks of blood," Barakat said.

Children in war orphanages on the Christian side of Beirut were no less bitter. They reflected similar feeling toward the Muslim camp.

"I will eat a lot to grow quickly and continue to train on arms. I must some day kill a Muslim man and assault a Muslim woman. I'll do that because those beasts did the same to my sister and parents," said Tony Matta, 11.

Wielding a toy machine gun, Tony nodded approval as other children described Muslims as "curve-nosed, red-eyed baboons eating kibbeh and sipping arab over malted bodies of Christian victims."

Nearly three months have passed since the current truce began. But toy sellers say machine guns, revolvers and tanks still top their sales. Groups of children are often seen mimicking gunmen and setting up roadblocks to simulate kidnap and massacre operations.

"It's deeply disturbing to see children equating images of street gunmen and looters with those of heroes and warriors," said Dr. Nizar Zein, Professor of Psychology at the Lebanese University. "The process of identification, wherein children absorb accepted social norms and integrate with society, has been badly disrupted."

He said hundreds of children participated in looting and petty thefts during the civil war. Children who normally imitate their parents and are guided by accepted practices have been confused by "distorted images" of their parents as "doubled-headed monsters eating human flesh and drinking flasks of blood," Barakat said.

Children in war orphanages on the Christian side of Beirut were no less bitter. They reflected similar feeling toward the Muslim camp.

"I will eat a lot to grow quickly and continue to train on arms. I must some day kill a Muslim man and assault a Muslim woman. I'll do that because those beasts did the same to my sister and parents," said Tony Matta, 11.

Wielding a toy machine gun, Tony nodded approval as other children

authority has been badly shaken during the civil war.

"Politicians who had recklessly mobilized the people emotionally must now exert themselves to defuse traumatic repetition among children. They must preach love and familiarity among children of the various religious sects," suggested Dr. Sader Yunes, Professor of Sociology at the Lebanese University. "Unless a social panacea is found, those children will be ticking away like a time bomb for our society."

Dr. Antwan Manugian, director of Lebanon's sole mental hospital, complained the country lacks the necessary specialized institutions and doctors to deal with children's problems.

"It was not a war in any sense," he said. "It was different from many types of conflict known to mankind. Confusion, murder, orgies and anarchy would be a more appropriate description as far as children are concerned."

He suggested that modified school systems, emphasizing Muslim-Christian amity, would be the best solution.

"As things stand now, Muslim children are taught the history of the Prophet Mohammed and Pan-Arabism. Christian children are taught in separate schools to appreciate the virtues of our Western ideas. This will have to be replaced with a unified syllabus that stresses national unity and bridges cultural gaps that separate our children," said Lebanon's ambassador to Cyprus, Munir Takeddin. (AP)

Namir hits tender spot in women's rights battle

MARSHA POMERANTZ / Jerusalem Post Reporter

MK Ora Namir: asks for consistency (Rahmani)

THE LATEST round in the women's rights battle was a restrained and proper exchange of correspondence between MK Ora Namir and Civil Service Commissioner Ya'acov Nitzan. The subject: published job tenders, in which the Hebrew feminine ending ta', makes all the difference.

Namir, in her capacity as woman and chairperson of the Prime Minister's Committee on the Status of Women, complained to Nitzan about a pamphlet published in late December, advertising open positions in the Civil Service. According to her letter, 31 of the 88 tenders published label the job in the masculine: department head, director of mental health station, general practitioner, senior geologist. In all, the male chauvinism was a giveaway: no ta'.

The other five tenders were either specifically feminine or strangely androgynous. For instance, the title "head of health centre," or "general nurse" both had that secondary sex characteristic, ta'. To confuse things, three tenders required a "laboratory worker" in the masculine, but specified that the worker must be a virologist, biochemist, or hematologist — in the feminine.

Nitzan's reply referred to "extension activity" to advance women in the Civil Service. Among other moves, the Commission had appointed Ora Julius, "a special senior employee" to deal with the problems of women in government jobs.

Ya'acov Nitzan: response goes half-way

CHRISTIAN COMMENT / Oikumenikos

Galilee monastery — without walls

JACOB WILLEBRANDS, an Israeli citizen born in Holland, heads a remarkable monastery without walls, high on a Galilean hill between Jews and Arabs.

Father Willebrands' love for the people of the Land goes back to the influence of a second cousin who was sent to Daebau because of his courageous stand against the Nazi deportation of Jews from Holland.

Age and the toll of Daebau prevented the realization of his dream, but Father Willebrands caught the vision of a monastery here. He had already been a Trappist monk for 10 years when he submitted a proposal for a monastic community here, but it was refused.

Willebrands discovered in Israel a Christian community with a rich and ancient tradition in monasticism, and realized that it was pointless to transplant a monastic order from western Europe. He became a member of the Greek Catholic diocese, now headed by Archbishop Makarios Salomon in Haifa.

After several years' search, a tiny monastery was started on the 521m. summit of Mt. Netofa in Galilee. The monastery's name is Mt. Netofa (Netofa Hermitage), just over three kilometers from the Arab village of "Deir Hanina." The "view" is breathtaking: the Mediterranean Sea to the west, and the Sea of Galilee far below, and the east, Mt. Hermon, the Golan Heights, and Mt. Tabor are all easily visible.

The monastery does not fit the traditional image. There are no walls around its 38 dunams, no pretentious buildings. "People are what make a community," says Father Willebrands, and at the moment there are 12 residents: two monks who are also lay members, a French nun, and nine young people who share the life of prayer, study, contemplation, and manual work.

Living conditions at the monastery are still rather primitive. For the first five years, the community lived in tents. Hundreds of trees have been planted. Crops include wheat and barley. Five goats roam the hillside. Three large cisterns catch rainwater from the roofs of the simple buildings. A cave has been turned into a chapel where devotions begin at five a.m. A generator supplies electricity from six until 10 in the evening.

"We try to keep open to what God wants us to be and do in this place," says Father Willebrands. "We have made genuine efforts to adapt ourselves and become one with our local Arabic-speaking neighbors." (Willebrands speaks Arabic and Hebrew, as well as six other languages.) "Local Christians are Arab, of course, and they have come to our community, but we have also had Arab Muslims staying with us. Deir Hanna is one-sixth Christian and five-sixths Muslim, and our relations are equally good with both groups."

"Some recent Jewish visitors, who were impressed by the values of monastic life, asked what they could do to establish a new Jewish monastic community, perhaps similar to the Essenes at Qumran." Father Willebrands' research has led him to the conviction that Palestinian Christianity has survived through the centuries and that its traces are to be found in the Greek Catholic, or Melkite, Church in Israel today.

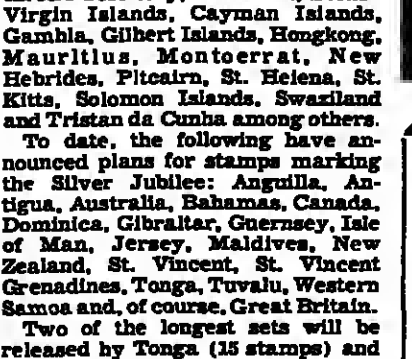

Father Jacob Willebrands

belong to the same people. "I see the return of the Jewish people to their old homeland," continues Willebrands, "as a step in the unfolding of the divine purpose," but I believe no less that the Palestinians share in what we Christians call the "mystery of Israel." Muslims and Christians have their essential role in it, no less than believing and unbelieving Jews.

"Israel will never fulfil its part in the unfolding of the divine plan if the indispensable task of every group is not recognized. We should encourage and help the old local Churches to take their place and tasks in the new situation."

The monastery at Mt. Netofa is near the new Jewish settlement of Nahal Tadmor and Deir Hanna, where tragic events occurred last spring. Father Willebrands' hospital visits and other expressions of concern revealed that monastic life today need not imply "ivory tower" isolation from the world.

To some, being a monk may seem an anachronism in a technological age. However, those who share in the community at Mt. Netofa have apparently retained the value of monastic life, while being aware of and concerned with the complicated problems confronting people in Galilee today.

Queen's anniversary

LAST YEAR the events that generated an international flood of new stamps were the centenary of the first telephone call, the bicentenary of the American Revolution and the Montreal Olympic Games.

This year one of the big events will be, on February 4, the 25th anniversary of Queen Elizabeth's ascent to the throne of England after the death of her father, King George VI. Her coronation in Westminster Abbey took place on June 2, 1953.

The nearly 50 Commonwealth members who have announced plans to mark the event will participate through the Crown in the omnibus issue or will release stamp sets and, in some cases, souvenir sheets.

THE JEWISH SCENE / Geoffrey Wigoder

The Jews of Egypt

PRESIDENT SADAT may meet with a delegation of the World Jewish Congress, according to reports in the press. This would be a further link in a long historical chain going back to the first intervention in Egypt by a Jewish delegation — that of Moses and Aaron.

The Jews in Egypt have had a long and chequered history. Their modern period began just a century ago when Egypt came under Anglo-French control, and foreign nationals received economic and legal privileges.

By the end of the century the Jewish population had jumped from 6,000 to 25,000, and the newcomers soon dominated the community. They seldom integrated fully. Most of their children attended the foreign schools in the country. Until the late 1930s, there were no overt signs of anti-Jewish feeling (except among certain Christian circles, who spread blood libels).

Incitement began in the late 1930s and took a serious turn after World War II, with anti-Jewish riots in 1945. Anti-Zionism easily deteriorated into anti-Jewishness, and Egyptian Jews suffered severely during the next 25 years. Mass internments in times of crisis were accompanied by waves of emigration. In 1947, there were 66,000 Jews in Egypt: the number remaining today is estimated at 500.

Most are elderly. About 300 live in Cairo and 200 in Alexandria. A Canadian journalist, Sheldon Kirshner, gives a picture of the Jews today in the American Jewish journal "Midstream." Kirshner walked through the streets of Cairo, where he saw the sign of a dentist named Victor Bromberg. He turned out to be a Jew who had been brought to Cairo from Tel Aviv at the age of six months. He has been there 58 years and is one of the younger members of the Jewish community.

Bromberg never acquired Egyptian citizenship; his wife retains her Algerian nationality. Many Egyptian Jews remain citizens of other countries as a form of insurance. Bromberg, like all the Jews interviewed by Kirshner, had nothing but affection for the average Egyptian. But for all his praise of the Egyptians, he found it difficult to explain why he had been imprisoned for a year after the Six Day War.

His brother-in-law, a lawyer, admitted that life for the Jews had been better under the monarchy, saying, "We are alone here. The future is zero." Bromberg said that all his family lives in North America, and there was nothing left for the Jews in Egypt.

THE PRESIDENT of the Cairo Jewish Community Council is 75-year-old Felix Isakaki. The Council maintains community property and the secretaries (usually advertised in internal tenders) who are always assumed to be women? When men apply to be secretaries, the Status people will have done their job for civil service.

synagogues and represents the community in all legal and government matters. Some Cairo Jews feel that Isakaki is ineffectual and a tool of the regime. He claims that the community is treated well by the government; that leading officials visit the synagogues on the High Holidays; and that life has improved, he can call on the Ministry of the Interior for help. He is at ease in the country where his family settled a century ago. He strongly feels, however, the contrast between the rich past and the drab present. "The young Egyptians don't know the reality. There's a war, and they think the Jews are the enemy."

The Egyptian Jews were unwilling to discuss politics, with one exception, architect Georges Katli. He had served three years in prison on charges of being a Zionist, but was not afraid to say: "If they understood the Arab mentality as well as I do, the Israelis would not withdraw an inch from Sinai or other territories. I have a deep affection for the Egyptian, but he cannot be trusted." Katli developed his thesis in public cafes, oblivious to potential eavesdroppers.

Katli also spoke of his prison experience. At first, he had been jailed with other opponents of the regime (including Moslem Brothers and Jehovah's Witnesses). Later treatment improved and he got half-decent food, could write letters and receive visitors. He and the other Jews were not molested during the Yom Kippur War; the government, he said, knew that the small community of elderly and middle-aged men and women posed no security threat.

There are said to be 18 synagogues in Cairo, but most are all but abandoned. The Ben Ezra synagogue is dilapidated, with dusty prayer books, mouldy tallitot and decayed Torah scrolls. Nobody seems to care. There is an "old" and decrepit caretaker and a minyan on Shabbat.

On the other hand, the Sha'ar Shamayim Synagogue is in good shape. Last filled in 1936, it is little more than a quiet monument in the heart of Cairo's commercial district. The Jewish cemetery at Bassatine has been badly desecrated and looks as though it has been severely bombed. This is in the best Egyptian grave-robbing tradition, Kirshner notes. Guards and peasants in the vicinity plundered it. Greed, not anti-Semitism or anti-Zionism, motivated its destruction.

After visiting Bassatine with Bromberg, Kirshner asked him why he had remained in Egypt. Bromberg answered, "Where would I go and what would I do abroad? All the Jews of Egypt are old. We're all right now."

ONE PARTY

There is only ONE PARTY in Israel able to bring about a change, and to lead the nation - THE LIKUD.

One united party - not a collection of fractions and splinters.

The other movements, the new parties, lack the strength to bring about real change. A vote for them is a vote to perpetuate the status quo.

Now is the time for change. Even the heads of the Government admit "we can't go on like this." Depression and pessimism have become widespread, "yerida" is growing. We, who once hoped to be a light unto the nations now bitterly joke: "The last one at Lod to turn out the lights."

Only the LIKUD can bring about change. 50 years of rule by ONE PARTY have taken their toll. The Labor Party is exhausted and disintegrating. And tainted...

In all our history a change has never been so urgently needed.

In all our history it has never been more possible.

The LIKUD can bring it about - with your support.

The LIKUD can restore our national momentum, and our faith in ourselves - with your support.

Join us, strengthen us, help us do what must be done.

The LIKUD - ONE PARTY - united and ready to lead the nation.

Setting the stage

THE diplomatic pace in the Middle East has begun to quicken. The Arab states have already begun talks between themselves to align positions and present a common and workable front to the United States.

At the beginning of next month, Egypt, Jordan and Syria, guided gently from behind the scenes by Saudi Arabia, are expected to convene a summit meeting of their own to prepare for the visit to the area of the new U.S. Secretary of State, Cyrus Vance.

These moves coincide with reports that the Arab states have made it plain to the PLO that it will have to trim its sails and that Jordan will represent the West Bank interest in any future negotiations at Geneva or elsewhere.

While these moves and cues are clearly directed at the United States, less notice is being taken of the scheduled visit to the area by U.N. Secretary-General Waldheim.

This is not simply because of the amorphous and fundamentally impotent nature of the United Nations. It is also because Mr. Waldheim, in his recent statements stressing the role of the PLO, put himself out of step with the trend of events in the area and the negotiating realities. The fact is that the principal Arab states view the PLO as a nuisance factor. Moreover, even its nuisance value has been diminished by the events in Lebanon.

Thus, the paradox is that precisely at a time when not only Israel and the U.S., who are committed to excluding the PLO from a future Geneva conference, but also the Arab states are adopting such a position on the PLO, Mr. Waldheim should be voicing a discordant tone.

It is for this reason that his visit, scheduled for early next month, has taken on a spectre of irrelevance.

The Likud election campaign, launched today, avoids many of the issues which have 'turned off' voters in the past. YOSEF GOELL discusses the campaign, and the position 'between the lines' with Ezer Weizman, newly selected to head the Likud's electoral drive.

Ezer's battle plan

"THE TROUBLE with most generals is that they tend to prepare for the next war in terms of the last one," says Ezer Weizman. "I'm preparing to wage the Likud's present electoral campaign on the basis of an analysis of the current situation."

The Likud's electoral campaign head, former Air Force Commander and Deputy Chief of Staff Ezer Weizman, was parrying a query whether he had analysed what the Likud had done wrong in the last elections. Ezer, with his perennial boyish verve belying the grey creeping into his hair, admitted that some things had gone wrong in the Likud's calculations and election strategy in December 1973. But he preferred not to dwell on split milk.

"The situation today is different. The country is ready for a change of regime as never before, and we, the Likud, are the only feasible alternative to a decayed Labour Alignment."

Nevertheless, what had gone wrong in 1973, when the Likud had seemed to be in the best position in its history to upset the 40-year rule of the Labour Alignment and its constituent parties? Weizman notes that the Likud increased its strength impressively to 39 Knesset seats. It was prevented from gathering enough extra Knesset strength to form the government because of the atmosphere which characterized the aftermath of the Yom Kippur War. The country had withdrawn within itself to lick its wounds, he felt, and the Alignment capitalized on this mood with the Geneva "peace talks hint." This "hint," he feels, cost the Likud just the number of votes it needed to make the difference between forming the government and continuing in its 25-year-long opposition.

But things have changed in the past three years, Weizman feels. The public has woken up to the Alignment's speaking in so many voices.

"Read our first campaign advertisement and you'll know what we're going to tell the public," Weizman referred to the first product of his 10-day-old labour as Likud campaign chairman, which appears as a full page ad in this newspaper today.

I read the ad and remained perplexed. "But it doesn't say much," I protested.

"Read it again and this time read it between the lines, too, for what isn't there," he insisted.

What is the basic assumption that the electoral wants change and that the Likud is the "one party" in Israel able to bring about a change. "One united party — not a collection of factions and splinters. The other movements, the new parties, lack the strength to bring about real change. A vote for them is a vote to perpetuate the status quo," Weizman says.

What isn't there is that part of the Likud's and Herut's political image which is suspected of having turned off enough voters in the past to keep electoral victory out of its reach. There is no unnecessary sabre-rattling, no reference to the divisive issue of the territories, and no reference to Geneva, yes or no.

Not everyone in Herut agrees with this downgrading of traditional positions, but Weizman seems to have won out on his demand to wage the campaign in accordance with his own lights.

In conversation he is ready to expand on these "in-between-the-lines" issues. The Likud, he points out, has rethought these questions and has come out for meaningful territorial concessions on the Golan Heights and in Sinai in return for peace with the Arabs. It remains adamantly opposed to such concessions on the West Bank and Gaza. In the electoral campaign, Weizman insists, this opposition to concessions on the West Bank should be seen in a comparative context.

The Alignment and Yadin's party speak of territorial concessions in the West Bank while retaining the Jordan River as Israel's security border. This is pure flummery, he insists; you simply cannot have one and the other — it's either, or.

"I disagree with men such as Matti Peled who speak of giving back the West Bank in its entirety, but I respect his consistency and openness. Those who speak of concessions on the West Bank while retaining the Jordan River as a security border, are simply trying to pull the wool over the people's eyes."

The glaring discrepancy in Weizman's signed ad between the claim of the Likud's constituting "one united party" and the fact that the Likud is a bloc whose constituent parties have resisted full merger, is passed over in silence.

But the Likud campaign will stress the decay and disintegration of the Labour Alignment. In such a context perhaps the Likud will be able to successfully portray itself as "one united party."

The Likud's greatest asset, Weizman feels, is Menachem Begin. The principal issue in the election will be leadership or the lack of it. The central question that will concern the voter as he goes into the voting booth will be: "Who is going to be our next Prime Minister?"

There are three possible candidates," Weizman says: "Rabin, Peres and Begin. When you compare these three men the only man who can, by any stretch of the imagination, be viewed as a leader, is Menachem Begin."

In the euphoria which swept the nation in the spring of 1974 when Yitzhak Rabin was selected by Labour to replace Golda Meir, Weizman was the only voice to warn publicly against Rabin. Recalling his experience as Deputy Chief of Staff under Rabin prior to and immediately after the Six Day War, Weizman contended that there were defects in Rabin's personality that made him basically unfit to serve as Prime Minister. Weizman was roundly castigated at the time for "hitting below the belt."

He has not reiterated his views publicly, but in this week's interview he claimed that his views on Rabin have been vindicated by his performance during the three years of his incumbency.

"The Alignment he bankrupted because it cannot provide leadership," he says, "because it has no leaders."

The possibility of a Peres candidacy doesn't worry him either. "Look, with all my being an opponent of the Labour Alignment, I cannot but admit that he had leaders at one time. Eshkol, Golda and Dayan were natural leaders. What they have today is not serious."

By contrast, Weizman will attempt to persuade the electorate that Begin

is a natural leader, and a leader worthy of his trust. "He is an honest man... no small thing in these days... he lives modestly, not just for public relations purposes, and he has never shilly-shallyed about what he is for and what he is against."

So much for reading in between the lines.

The Likud is unanimous on Begin as its candidate for Prime Minister in a coalition which it hopes to form after the elections. But what of the rest? Who is the Likud proposing for Minister of Defence? For Minister of Finance? Justice, and all the rest?

After suitable preliminary evasive tactics, Weizman admits that the Likud has not yet had time to decide on its full shadow cabinet. "But rest assured," he promises, "in two-three weeks we will tell the public who we are proposing for Ministers of Defence and Finance."

Weizman is known to be the major force within the Likud pushing for a clear decision on fielding a shadow cabinet. But it is in this area that the Likud bloc has its major problems. In the event of a Likud victory major Cabinet posts will have to be divided between the Herut, Liberal and La'am parties which compose the Likud, not to mention the Likud's prospective coalition partners.

The Liberals will be holding their convention in the next few weeks and only then will the Likud be able to sit down to hammer out its Knesset list and shadow cabinet. Weizman himself is a front runner for Minister of Defence in such a shadow cabinet. This means that Finance and Foreign Affairs would have to go to the Liberals and La'am, with the former post being in special contention between these groups. The inevitability of a government even if Likud's Alignment in the polls were to please this matter even as

"The Likud's vague domestic issues on which its campaign reflects the state of unreadiness in which it has been caught in the decision to call earlier elections. Even though these points worked out by March, some are already clear, having been consistently stressed by the Likud's component parties over the years:

- * A national health service insurance system to replace the Holim system of the past;
- * Compulsory arbitration of disputes in essential services

- * Dismantling of the Histadrut separation of its trade unions from its ownership of enterprises in the shape of Ovdim.

"The Histadrut, in its incoherent roles of major trade union employer, constitutes one of the examples of systemic corruption in the country," Weizman decries.

This, however, will not come the major thrust of the Likud's campaign. These, as noted, will be Change, as opposed to breakdown and paralysis. Labour Alignment government — Menachem Begin as Minister, to be preferred to the demoralized Alignment offer.

Yadin, in this view, is simply the running.

IT IS both interesting and gratifying that it should be a Professor of Catholic Thought who points out a striking virtue, from the Jewish point of view, of the recently published Good News Bible.

Writing in the New Catholic News Service, Prof. Leonard Swidler, of Temple University in Philadelphia (which, despite its name, is a non-Jewish institution) stresses the new publication's elimination of mistranslations in the new New Testament, particularly in the Gospel of St. John, which have in the past helped to foster anti-Semitism.

"The worst mistranslation of this kind," he writes, "has been the rigid rendering of John's use of the Greek 'Ioudaios' (literally, the 'Jews') with 'Jews' in unvarying consistency, even though scholars discern at least seven distinct meanings of the word as used by John in his Gospel... This new edition is finely nuanced, translating 'Ioudaios' variously as "people," "Judeans," "crowd," "Jews," "Jewish authorities" — all depending on the real meaning in the context."

Prof. Swidler adds a comment which everyone must respond fervently: "So the Gospel of John is to be read in Holy Week and in the liturgical year, let this be the translation."

Israelis who remember the Eastern European tradition of reading the Gospel during week before Easter was so prelude to anti-Jewish excesses feel that the Good News Bible up to its name.

Dry Bones

ISRAEL PRESS

Moving towards Geneva

DAVAR (Histadrut) says that the revised position "the Arab 'confrontation states' their willingness to attend the first stage of the Geneva conference without the PLO, is not as revolutionary as it may seem. This is because no party can take part in the conference without the consent of the original participants. Moreover, the participation of the PLO can be proposed only after the conference convenes, and not before."

Nevertheless it is possible that the announced willingness to exclude the PLO portends an Arab readiness to be flexible on this issue even in subsequent stages of the talks, so as to enable them to take place.

AL HAMISHMAR (Mapam) feels that the ground is being prepared for the reconvening of the Geneva conference. The gap between Israel and the Arab states, however, is so great that we must not be deluded into thinking that it can be bridged by a single move or by formulas alone.

All the same, the Arab world is going through a stage of awakening from its dream of liquidating Israel. The tremendous burden of defence expenditures is giving rise to thoughts as to whether it would not be better to find a way to coexist. The more this line of thinking tends to predominate, the greater will be the Arabs' readiness to advance towards peace. Israel, for its part, must be prepared to demonstrate a large degree of flexibility and a willingness for territorial compromise, while defending its vital interests.

HA'ARETZ (Independent) says the entry of a Syrian battalion into Nabatiye in southern Lebanon violates the status quo that has existed for almost a year and carries with it the danger that the area may be turned into a base for Syrian aggression against Israel. At this stage, the Syrians can still withdraw without loss of face, and the fact that southern Lebanon will in effect be demilitarized is not something without precedent: the Sinai Peninsula was similarly demilitarized during the ten years prior to 1967, and without prejudice to any vital Egyptian interest. The fact is that such solutions, even if not designed to be permanent, can make an important contribution towards calm in the Middle East. It is now up to Washington to make it clear to the Syrians that their latest move is detrimental to a vital Israeli interest. At stake is Washington's credibility, as much as, or even more than, Jerusalem's.

READERS' LETTERS

THE EBLA TABLETS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — I have studied your several articles on the recently discovered Ebla Tablets with great interest, the latest of these being your report on Dr. David Friedman's lecture at the Rockefeller Museum. What I take to be most important in this lecture is that the dates of the history of the ancient Middle East are by no means definite, that these dates can and will hopefully be adjusted to reflect the most recent archaeological discoveries.

What I am sorry to see missing in these articles is the name of Dr. Emmanuel Velikovsky, a man who, through painstaking scholarship, has long argued that the traditional dates of ancient Middle East history are indeed wrong. His deductions are not derived from such a fertile find as the 18,000 tablets unearthed in Ebla. His theories are formed from laboriously correlating the diverse histories of the ancient Middle East empires.

Dr. Velikovsky proposed 36 years ago, much of what is being suggested today in light of the Ebla Tablets in his work "Ages in Chaos." It is necessary to add that Dr. Velikovsky is considered a very controversial figure in the archaeological world. I hope that a thorough study of the contents of the Ebla Tablets will create a more sympathetic climate for a new appraisal of Dr. Velikovsky's long published theories. The best place to begin to understand his work is in his book "Ages in Chaos."

IMPORT OF PONIES

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — I read in The Post of January 16 that our kibbutzim have started to import ponies from Copenhagen by air for the use of their children.

It seems that our export of agricultural products has been so successful that we know no better way to spend our dollars. We can now look forward to the day when kibbutzim will have their own polo teams and participate in international competitions. In the meantime, of course, it will not be possible to reduce the high price of vegetables here.

TENNIS COURTS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — After coming from Chicago, where there are public tennis courts in every neighbourhood (including the slums), I had to resign myself to joining a private tennis club here in Haifa. I soon discovered that whatever sports activity I wished to participate in also required my joining a private club. I am finding it hard to sustain such memberships, and there must be countless others who cannot participate at all.

Then I read in your January 11 article that local sponsors are being sought out to contribute $75,000 worth of prize money for a tennis tournament. Think of how many tennis courts could be built for the public with that money! It is time we stopped being a nation of spectators, and started promoting athletics for all segments of the population.

BURIAL SITE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — Miss T. Huddly (January 18) is wrong in presuming that a person who has committed suicide has to be buried, according to Jewish law, beyond the fence of the cemetery, and it is not true that the case of the late Abraham Ozer was an exception.

Taking one's own life is considered a grave sin in the eyes of the Halacha, but in fact the Halacha presumes that the deed was done while the person was, at least in his last moments, of unimpaired mind and that his suicide was not deliberate nor premeditated.

Therefore, and also out of respect for the feelings and reputation of the family, burial is permitted in an ordinary grave within a cemetery.
